Washington State Hospital Update:

Elise shared that hospitals in Washington State are operating above capacity. This is due to the challenges with placement difficulties and limited staffing. Placement issues result in more complex patients being kept longer locally and longer Emergency Department wait times. The national labor shortage has had a significant impact on healthcare workers and has contributed to capacity issues.

Elise expanded on how operating above capacity directly impacts Island Health. Patients staying with Island Health for longer period of times due to the challenges of transferring patients for higher level of care. Placing patients into long term care facilities has been challenging due to State regulations. Island Health has also seen increased ED patient volume and is experiencing staffing shortages.

Elise expanded on capacity impacts remarking on the following:

- Capacity crisis is impacting both urban and rural areas
- As larger hospitals reach capacity, smaller hospitals are caring for more complex patients that would normally be transferred out for specialty services.
- Biggest factor impacting capacity is the patients awaiting discharge to nursing homes, adult family homes or other similar settings.
- Limited inpatient bed capacity here and at the large tertiary hospitals impact patients in our community.

Elise shared what is being done to here at Island Health to address the capacity issues not that Island Health is partnering, educating legislators and state leaders on the current conditions and asking for support and solutions to move non-acute patient care out of the hospitals, continues to hire and training new staff, work with department leaders, physicians and care teams to improve processes to remove barriers for patients, staff and physicians and continues to work with DOH and local media to educate patients on when to use the Walk In Clinic vs. the Emergency Department.

Elise remarked on the joint efforts with other Washington State hospitals and WSHA to address the issues. Highlighted were the following:

- Stop discriminating against Medicaid patients by requiring unnecessary guardianships
- Fund bed readiness programs at acute care hospitals.
- Maintain and expand rapid response teams to stabilize long-term care facilities.
- Expand child and adult respite capacity to prevent inappropriate hospitalization of children and adults with developmental disabilities.
